

Presentation title: The life-sciences as a pathfinder in data-intensive research practice

Abstract:

The advent of the Internet is bringing about fundamental changes in the ways that research is performed and communicated. These have been particularly driven by the growing importance of data, as well as the tools available to work with this data. This presentation will examine this shift, drawing on examples from the life-sciences, and try to make some predictions about the next five years.